Spotlight

If you are planning to apply to teaching positions this fall, you will want to take the summer months to think about your Teaching Statement, a purposeful and reflective essay about your teaching beliefs and practices.

"At its best, a Teaching Statement gives a clear and unique portrait of the author as a teacher, avoiding generic or empty philosophical statements about teaching," explains the Vanderbilt Center for Teaching resource page.

The CFT website lists many resources on how to write an excellent Teaching Statement, including reflection questions to get you started.

Don't wait until you start applying to gather your thoughts about this essay! The document requires reflection, sincerity, and humility... with lots of revisions! Check out the Center for Teaching Teaching Statement resource page to get you started.
